OF RECORD

University Recognized Holidays

In the remainder of this fiscal year (July 1, 1984-June 30, 1985), the Memorial Day holiday will be observed by the University on Monday, May 27, 1985.

In addition, an employee is eligible for a floating day off each fiscal year which may be used on any day for any reason, scheduled mutually with one's supervisor. Floating holidays are not cumulative. Please note that Good Friday, April 5, 1985 is a regular work day on which a floating day off may be used.

Vacations and holidays for Hospital employees or those employees in collective bargaining units are governed by the terms of Hospital policy or their respective collective bargaining agreements.

University Recognized Holidays for fiscal year 1985-86 will be announced in May 1985.

In Brief

Belgian Exchange: The Office of International Programs has extended the deadline for applications to the Penn-Leuven Exchange to April 30. Some financial support may be awarded for visits of a month to a year for teaching and/or research at the Katholieke Universiteit Leuven in 1985-86. For information on this or future participation at Leuven, call Professor Jan Van der Spiegel, Ext 7116, or Dr. Joyce Randolph at Ext. 4661.

Classroom Dedication: The southeast corner classroom of the Physically Handicapped Training Center was dedicated as "Memorial Classroom" at the March 23 graduation ceremonies. Mr. William P. Norman, a member of PHTC's 1979 Computer Science class, made a generous gift to the Center in memory of three of his former classmates.

Student Telethon Record: This year's student telethon, held February 4-14, raised a record $170,880 from a record 4,223 donors. The event was sponsored by the Kite and Key Society and the Intrafraternity Council. Money raised is used for scholarships, financial aid, library support and other areas that directly affect students.

Senate: Contested Election for Six Offices

As announced below by Senate Chair Jacob Abel, there will be a mail ballot for Faculty Senate members to choose between candidates nominated by the Senate committee and those nominated by petition for 1985-86 Senate offices. Contested offices are chair-elect, secretary-elect, and the four at-large seats on the Senate Executive Committee.

Ballots will be mailed this week by the Senate Office. Completed returns must be in the Senate Office by 5 p.m. Friday, April 12, and must be in the provided "double envelope" in order to be counted. The outcome will be announced at Senate's Spring Meeting Wednesday, April 17.

Statements by all twelve candidates appear on pages 2-3 of this issue.

This is the second consecutive year to have a partial alternative slate. Last year in addition to the six offices being contested this year, there were alternate candidates also for the Senate Committee on the Economic Status of the Faculty. The petition slate won all of the contests.

Letters: Almanac space in the the April 2 and April 9 issues will be heavily devoted to two kinds of Senate material—standing committee reports for the April 17 meeting, and letters concerning the election. In the event of space conflicts, shorter election letters might take priority over longer ones, and (with the monitoring of the Senate Committee on Publications Policy for Almanac) writers of essentially similar arguments might be asked to combine and co-sign their messages. The standing deadline is Thursday at noon before the Tuesday of issue. Letters that set up right-of-reply must be submitted ahead of deadline to allow respondents to meet the deadline for inclusion of the reply in the same issue.

James F. Ross (philosophy)

Statements of Candidates Nominated by the Committee

Chair-Elect

Roger D. Soloway

Overview: I regard the nomination for Chair of the Senate as a privilege and honor. The evolution of the Senate over the past few years into a genuine consultative and deliberative body, addressing issues of substance to the University presents the opportunity for effective faculty input. The University has become a very large institution with many layers between the President and Faculty. Fragmentation of objectives occurs as schools develop along different lines and perceive divergent missions. The most important mechanism to achieve our goals is communication. Regular meetings between the Senate Committee on Consultation and the administration is a clear example of how frequent communication works for the good of all. Current efforts to reassess the structure of the Senate Executive Committee and the responsibilities of its members to their constituents are important and can serve to publicize more widely the issues before the committee as well as to obtain input from the widest spectrum of faculty.

Qualifications: I have served as a member and as Chair of the Senate Committee on the Faculty; as a member of several Provost's task forces, and as a member-at-large of the SEC for the past year. I have been a member of the executive committee of the Medical School Faculty Senate and have chaired and served on a number of committees within the Medical School. These experiences and service on committees for my professional societies has given me an understanding of the methods by which such committees function more effectively. I am presently the Associate Chief of the Gastrointestinal Section of the Department of Medicine and conduct an active research program in liver disease. My research has entailed organizing and conducting projects with colleagues in a number of disciplines. The essence of patient care as a specialist in liver disease is to listen carefully to patients, ascertain the facts and then to suggest a plan. Although this advice may not be accepted completely by the patient, my aim has been to create a plan that is acceptable and beneficial. This experience in gathering information, listening to others, offering advice and formulating conclusions which may not always agree perfectly with my personal view should serve me well in providing effective leadership for SEC.

Proposals:

1. My major aim is to obtain the widest possible input from the faculty into the deliberations of SEC. This could be accomplished by constructing a regular consultation system between members and their constituencies and between the School and University Senates. Methods for consultation with the administrations of the various schools should be explored.

2. A more active SEC-Senate dialogue must be undertaken with regard to faculty benefits. Mechanisms for this interchange must be in place as University resources become constricted.

3. It is more important than ever that the faculty become active in the review of the long range plans of the University and the School to place priorities in proper perspective when choices between programs must be made.

4. Regular reports from the SEC committees should be made at SEC meetings. This should facilitate improved communication with constituencies and better feedback from SEC to the committees.

5. Greater utilization of the expertise of the faculty should be undertaken to achieve the maximum efficiency of cost-cutting and stretching of increasingly limited University resources.

6. Creative means are necessary to give both the perception and substance to the claim that the University is sensitive and fair to all groups and interests. The present mechanisms may not be adequate to deal with day-to-day problems without more attention to communication with the aggrieved and other interested parties while adequately protecting the rights of all involved.

7. Present efforts to examine new mechanisms to heighten sensitivity should be supported within the constraints of both academic freedom and responsibility.

Secretary-Elect

Edward Peters

The interests of the faculty are not identical at all points with those of the cosmos, but they are of crucial importance to the faculty. The Faculty Senate needs officers who understand and are willing to express those interests and make policies based on them. I have been a member of the faculty for seventeen years and have served its interests in a number of capacities, including that of fellow-scholar and teacher, currently, among other capacities as Chair of the SAS Curriculum Committee, which does good and useful work.

SEC At-Large

Horst S. Daemrich

I will work to the best of my ability to advance the interests of colleagues in the diverse disciplines of the University. It would be presumptuous at this time to offer solutions to policies, proposed changes, and real or imagined crises and grievances. I will, however, carefully study the issues confronting the Senate, retain flexibility of judgment, and then give considered advice. I feel that the Senate must contribute its share to reversing the noticeable trend toward self-confinement among individuals, departments, and colleges. Such tendencies would develop into a destructive centripetal force that would seriously impede the central concern of our community of scholars: to

Statements of Candidates Nominated by Petition

Louis A. Girifalco

I am deeply honored that my colleagues have asked me to stand for election to the Chair-Elect of the Senate. An election can give the Faculty an opportunity to examine the Senate and its role in University affairs and it can remind us of the critical importance of the Senate. Because of this, and because Senate leadership is an opportunity to serve the basic values of the University, I have accepted the nomination.

The Senate leadership has major responsibilities with far reaching consequences for the Faculty in all aspects of University wide affairs. It must participate effectively in academic and budgetary planning not only because the health, and even survival, of some departments is at stake, but also because of the long range effects of the nature of our teaching and scholarship. It must do everything possible to further the faculty's economic status so that we can continue to maintain a faculty of the highest quality. Above all, it must preserve and enhance academic freedom and the academic values that should permeate every policy and every specific issue.

It is my view that a broader faculty participation is needed in the Senate to help integrate faculty opinion on specific issues and to represent the entire faculty with confidence. I will do what I can, in or out of office, to strengthen the Senate and widen its base among all segments of the faculty.

I am particularly interested in helping the Senate transcend ideological differences since University affairs should not be viewed through either left or right handed lenses. Rather, specific issues need to be addressed objectively with due regard to the entire spectrum of faculty opinion and a commitment to our basic academic principles. Given the strength with which some faculty members hold their views, I don't know how much can be done in this direction, but is worth trying.

Broadening the faculty base and narrowing the differences among us will help make the Senate voice strong, clear and heeded. This is necessary in these times of financial stringency, complexity and increasing centralization of authority.

Daniel Vining

As we move towards a more diverse community—racially, ethnically, culturally, and politically—we must be especially vigilant that we maintain an atmosphere of mutual tolerance in which free discussion is still possible. Diverse environments have the potential of being both a boon and a suppressant to free thought. And yet a university without free thought is a contradiction in terms. One of the basic conditions for maintaining an atmosphere of mutual tolerance and respect is that discourse be conducted on a reasonably civil plane. In certain sectors of the University, the basic norms of civil discourse seem to have broken down. As a consequence, a certain chill has settled over the University as a haven for free inquiry.

If elected Secretary of the Senate, I will endeavor to help restore and maintain at the University a sense of community and fair play and thereby preserve an environment in which free inquiry can continue to be our primary goal.

SEC At-Large

Mary Catherine Glick

More and more special interest groups appear to exert their influence on University policies. I firmly believe that the primary group which should play a role in University affairs is the Faculty Senate. The collective wisdom of the faculty is a resource which should be readily available and utilized by University administration. It is through the Faculty Senate and its leadership that this can be accomplished. The real key, however, is the participation of the faculty in Senate affairs. My own deep concern leads me to seek election to the Senate Executive Committee.

I do so as a member of an alternative slate of candidates to that proposed by the Senate Nominating Committee. I feel strongly that choosing the leadership of the Faculty Senate should be a truly elective procedure with the Faculty being able to make a selection of its Senate leaders. Needless to say, I am pleased to be included in a stellar group of faculty seeking election.

I have an abiding commitment to academic excellence. I believe that the reputation of the University depends on the quality of the faculty. My aim as a member of the SEC would be to focus on the concerns of the faculty which would enhance its scholarship and its excellence. I would strive for maximum support of the faculty by the administration in terms of compensation and benefits. I would work to enhance every aspect of academic freedom. I have no doubt that my own values are in the mainstream and are shared by all concerned faculty of the University.

Adrian R. Morrison

I have agreed to accept the invitation by my colleagues to stand for election as an At-Large Member of SEC for two reasons: (1) I think any complex organization that plays an important role in the lives of its members should offer a choice of candidates. An election emphasizes the importance of the organization and at least encourages some thought about the aims of the organization. (2) I believe I represent the thinking of many who are concerned about the advance learning and to reach out to uncharted orbits.

Daniel Malamud

I am honored to have been selected by the nominating committee for an at-large representative on the Senate Executive Committee. While my research and teaching are primarily in the health science schools, I have an active interest and continuing involvement with the undergraduate schools at Penn. During my eight years at the University I have served on and/or chaired numerous committees at the school and University level. My emphasis in these activities has been on faculty-student interaction and on communications problem-solving such as the 1984 survey and evaluation which resulted in the continuation of Almanac as a freestanding weekly journal of record and opinion.

My major long-term concern is to maintain and strengthen Penn's high academic tradition. This starts with the recruitment and retention of first-rate students and faculty—and providing them with the services, benefits and environment for scholarship. This has been and must continue to be a major focus of the Faculty Senate. Like most of my colleagues I am also keenly aware that strong undergraduate educational programs are essential for preserving the quality and diversity of the student body. I believe the attention being given to this is healthy, and need not present a conflict of interest to us if faculty are fully involved in the design and quality control of new educational ventures.

I prefer consultation to confrontation, and to deal with small problems before they become major issues. Penn has a long and admirable tradition of faculty involvement in University planning and decision-making. It is a tradition that sometimes requires judicious and loyal opposition to expediency.

current climate of distrust among groups on this campus. I think that the former believe with me that the Faculty is overwhelmingly constituted of fundamentally decent individuals who can be trusted to act in a responsible manner with little direction from other parties. I believe that the great majority are seriously concerned with maintaining the standards and reputation of Penn through diligent teaching, honest scholarship, and humane treatment of others in the community.

My experience at Penn has been lengthy and varied. I began as a graduate student in 1961, received a Ph.D. in anatomy in 1964, joined the Veterinary faculty in 1966 and became a professor in 1974. I have served as an At-Large Member of SEC and as a constituency representative to University Council. For many years I have been a member of the Executive Committee of the Institute of Neurological Sciences, a university-wide organization based in the School of Medicine; and for the past several years I have been a member of the Council of University Scholars. I have served outside my school on the following committees of FAS concerned with undergraduate education: Instruction, Undergraduate Standing and Individualized Majors.

James D. Muhly

This has been a very disturbing spring semester at the University of Pennsylvania. At least three incidents, unrelated in event but closely connected in terms of campus reaction, have generated what can only be described as an atmosphere of guilt by accusation. Well-meaning individuals are prepared to overthrow long-standing principles for the sake of what they see as necessary short-term gain. Such irresolution has always had tragic consequences. A profound anti-intellectual attitude is emerging, one that promotes personal relationships and social

However, if we develop an overall "them vs. us" mentality—be it administration vs. faculty, or liberal arts vs. professional schools—we will weaken the faculty voice and the institution that has nurtured it.

If elected to SEC I am likely to show more than the average interest in timely and forthright information-sharing in the University, and in the outreach of SEC to the whole of the faculty and the University community. I view the at-large seats as responding to the entire faculty rather than a specific constituency and welcome the opportunity to serve in that role.

Elsa Ramsden

The issues before the Faculty Senate now and in the foreseeable future are complex and numerous. To offer to solve them all in this space is ludicrous; to introduce myself is feasible.

I have been a member of the faculty since 1969. As some of you may remember I was actively involved in academic negotiations between 1975 and 1981 when my school, ranked first in the nation, was phased out as a result of central administration planning decisions. That was an interesting period to participate in institutional policies and politics. I emerged from it nevertheless loyal to Penn, and rejected other offers in order to remain here.

At the present time I have an unusual relationship with this community of scholars, as a tenured associate professor financially attached to the Office of the Provost, while academically I pursue my interests under the aegis of the School of Medicine where I am Associate Professor of Behavioral Science in Psychiatry, and in facilities graciously lent by Harold Kundel in radiology (The current research is eye movement and cognitive processes.)

I have 22 years of university experience, sixteen of those at the University of Pennsylvania, in teaching, reform at the expense of teaching, research and scholarship.

I was one of those chosen to receive a copy of the Harassment Questionnaire. After examining the document I threw it in the trash. I cannot imagine any reasonable person taking the time to complete such a survey. Now we face the possibility of seminars on racism. I can well imagine an outside firm being brought in, at great expense, to run such seminars. We will probably have a Vice-Provost for Racial Awareness, with several assistants and an appropriate number of secretaries. All this will be financed through the elimination of another dozen faculty positions.

I regret the time and money spent on such foolishness. I came here in 1967 to teach and work with a group of very bright students, the best in the country. If students today are not in a position to take advantage of the unique opportunities offered by this University, but require help in developing interpersonal relationships and feel the need for group therapy, then they probably do not belong at a university. Events of the past few years indicate that we have had on the campus a number of very immature people who will never be able to understand the concept of the university as a community of scholars.

As a member of the Senate Executive Committee I will, if elected, do all I can to redress the imbalance that has now developed, to restore the primacy of teaching, research and scholarship and to return the University to the control of the faculty.

James F. Ross

A choice of slates is good for the election process. I hope alternatives will be offered every year.

I stand for issues too: refining our instruments for individual justice; ample faculty compensation, with correction of inequities (as pointed out by Anthro-student advising, counseling with students and peers, administration, academic planning and curriculum design, and research. I have served on many department and school committees, chaired several, was a member of the Community Relations Committee and a member of the Senate Executive Committee for 1980-1981. I have also served on a Grievance Panel.

I believe in the analytical approach and in having a Senate that is independent-minded and outspoken on University issues. I have been and continue to be a champion of fairness and an optimist about making unwieldy systems work.

Ralph R. Smith

The invitation to serve on the Senate Executive Committee came at a time when (for a number of reasons) it would have been easy to decline. However, it also came at a time of clear and compelling need for a University and faculty leadership that is responsive to the concerns and aspirations of constituencies ordinarily invisible and usually unheard. That is why I agreed to stand for this election.

The Committee Slate is composed of talented individuals spanning a broad spectrum of interests and personalities. As importantly, the Committee Slate allows for considerable ideological diversity. Thus, the Committee Slate presents a real opportunity for dialogue and constructive change.

My hope is, that my prior service on Law School committees and University-wide initiatives, my extensive teaching of both graduates and undergraduates, and the experience garnered from my terms as faculty master of DuBois College House (1980-81) and the Van Pelt College House (1983-present) have prepared me to make a meaningful contribution to the myriad issues on the Senate Executive Committee's near-term agenda.

pology faculty, Almanac March 12); reduction of administrative staff by attrition; return of faculty to managerial status under the trustees; allocation of funds to "hard" money funding of teaching and research and away from the "soft" money proposals recently circulated.

I stand for revising and publishing the university budget guidelines; for rejecting increases in "current expense" that are now three times national growth rates. As the president said ("Investing in Penn's Future"), the real priorities are what we find in the university budget.

I stand for choosing faculty leaders like Louis Girifalco, who as Acting Provost secured the only significant faculty compensation improvement in ten years. He recognizes that the faculty's status has eroded over the last decade and that faculty governance in matters of education, including the financial realities underneath, has to be restored.

I stand opposed to the extremists who lately demanded vigilante justice for accused individuals. I also oppose the strident atmosphere in which such delicate matters have been turned into prejudicial rhetoric.

I oppose using financial and administrative solutions, "throwing money at" problems of understanding and conscience. We are on the edge of class warfare. Look at what has happened to the genuine frustration of Black Students—it has been exploited for foolish objectives, not addressed at its heart.

Overall, maintain the excellence of professional schools and restore the centrality of the humanities (and fine arts) with hard money investments in faculty, libraries, research equipment. Cancel whatever "soft" money projects (that are not direct research activities) we can. Cut current expenses growth, and prepare for hard times from the government. Invest primarily in faculty and student aid.

DuBois College House Faculty Master

The Search Committee for the position of Faculty Master of DuBois College House has received a number of impressive applications in its national search. We are anxious to insure, however, that all appropriate candidates have come to the attention of the Committee. The Mastership is residential and will involve a full-time faculty appointment. The Committee would especially appreciate hearing about women who might be excellent prospective Faculty Masters. If you would like to nominate candidates please contact Dr. Christopher Dennis, Coordinator of College House Programs, 3901 Locust Walk/B8 (Ext. 5551).

Anti-Graffiti Cleanup

The Office of Off-Campus Living is looking for volunteers to join in an anti-graffiti cleanup effort planned for Saturday, March 30. Volunteers will assemble at the Spruce Hill Community Association Office, 257 South 45th Street at 9 a.m. For more information or to volunteer services call Ext. 5352.

Coming: Open Enrollment

April is the month for open enrollment so faculty and staff can change their health benefits if they wish. The options for Dental coverage are the 1) Faculty Practice Plan, and 2) Prudential. Health plan options are 1) Blue Cross/Blue Shield 100 Major Medical, 2) Philadelphia Health Plan, 3) Health America (formerly HSP), 4) HMO of Pa./N.J., 5) Delaware Valley HMO, and 6) Health Care Plan of New Jersey.

What is Open Enrollment?

Open Enrollment is the one time of the year when current faculty and staff can enroll in a health or dental plan. It is also the time when those who are already enrolled can change plans, terminate coverage or add or remove dependents. Open Enrollment 1985 will be held in April with many events planned to help individuals evaluate and decide which plan is best suited to their needs.

Why is Open Enrollment only once a year? Insurance companies and health maintenance organizations (HMOs) have a limited-time on enrollment periods or "windows" for the obvious reason that, without such a restriction, few would sign up for coverage until they thought they might need it. An insurance company health policy is established on the premise that the premiums paid by all of its policyholders, over time, will ensure that money is available when any of its members has a medical claim. If individuals were permitted to join a plan whenever they wished, it's a safe bet that many would choose to pay for the insurance only when its use could be anticipated. This is especially true of dental plans. An insurance company (or HMO) would soon bankrupt itself if it operated under such a system.

Deciding which plan is best for a person or a family requires more than a comparison of premiums. April is the time to decide. Watch for articles, an Open Enrollment mailing, and special events planned throughout the month. Then take some time to evaluate the options.

The Shoestring Players breathe life into Folktales From Around the World at the Annenberg Center this Friday and Saturday. Without sets or costumes, the actors use their bodies to become the mountains, rivers, castles, fish, birds, animals and people of faraway lands and times. The program includes stories from Italy, France, America and Ghana, plus an improvisational intermission piece that uses audience participation. See Children's Activities.
