Faculty Bargaining Case Appealed

The National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) has successfully petitioned the U.S. Supreme Court to review the controversial appellate court ruling that Yeshiva University faculty members, as managerial personnel, are not eligible to engage in collective bargaining. This is the first time that the Supreme Court has examined a case involving collective bargaining in higher education. It addresses the question of whether full-time university faculty, who take active roles in the hiring, compensation and promotion of their colleagues, are employees or supervisory personnel at Yeshiva University. The case is of importance to private educational institutions other than Yeshiva as it relates to the legitimacy of faculty bargaining groups.

In 1974, the NLRB certified the Yeshiva University Faculty Association as a bargaining agent for full-time faculty members. This decision was challenged by the university, and the U.S. Court of Appeals voted in favor of the university's claim that full-time faculty members have managerial status, thus disqualifying them from acting as bargaining agents. It is this decision which the Supreme Court will review.
